

About the authors

Dr. Tali Gottfried is a registered music therapist and a lecturer at M.A.A.T Music Therapy Training Program in David-Yellin College, Jerusalem, Israel. Tali is also the owner of the Private Practice for Music Therapy, and a supervisor for young music therapists. Tali's clinical experience includes working with children with neurodevelopmental delays and emotional needs and their families in both public and private sectors, in a parallel treatment setting. Her research focuses on music therapy with children with autism and on the needs and challenges of their parents, using music as a facilitating bridge in parent-child daily interaction. Tali has presented her work at various National and International conferences, and contributed a chapter about her model to the book "Music Therapy with Families: Therapeutic Approaches and Theoretical Perspectives", co-edited by Stine Lindahl-Jacobsen and Grace Thompson. Since 2014, Tali is the Israeli delegate to the European Music Therapy Confederation (EMTC).

Dr. Grace Thompson is a registered music therapist and senior lecturer at The University of Melbourne. Grace has worked in Early Childhood Intervention, Special Education and Private Practice. Her research focuses on music therapy with children with autism, disability, and delivered within ecologically oriented strategies. Grace has presented at various National and International conferences and workshops. In 2014, she was a Spotlight speaker at the World Congress of Music Therapy in Krems, Austria, and Keynote speaker at the Australian Music Therapy Association National Conference. Grace is past-President of the Australian Music Therapy Association and co-editor of the book "Music Therapy with Families: Therapeutic Approaches and Theoretical Perspectives".
